Atrial fibrillation, defined as rapid, uncoordinated atrial electrical activity, is a relatively common cardiac arrhythmia. A large percentage of cardiac patients (about 25%) have been reported to experience atrial fibrillation during their lifetime. The occurrence of atrial fibrillation is often associated with congestive heart failure. One particular patient condition that is associated with both atrial fibrillation and congestive heart failure is mitral valve stenosis. Mitral valve stenosis is the narrowing of the valve opening of the heart's mitral valve between the left atrium and the left ventricle. Thus, mitral valve stenosis typically involves a thickening and 82157476af
